02 Vulnerability

Summary

Hurricane Milton made landfall several miles to the south of Tampa Bay, FL on Wednesday night as a Category 3 storm. Mandatory evacuation orders were issued for zones A and B across the coastal counties of western Florida.

According to population dynamics data from Data for Good at Meta, evacuations did take place in substantial numbers prior to the landfall of Hurricane Milton. The rate of evacuation was highly correlated with the priority of the evacuation zone, with areas located in Zone A reduced by nearly 40% but areas located in Zone B reduced by only 10%.

Many coastal towns did show evidence of population reductions of 70% or more, including:

- St. James City (-73%)
- Charlotte Park (-73%)
- South Pasadena (-77%)
- Siesta Key (-81%)
- Manasota Key (-82%)
- Longboat Key (-84%)
- Madeira Beach (-84%)
- Treasure Island (-86%)
- St. Pete Beach (-93%)

Areas listed in the tables below as N/A (such as Anna Maria) should be considered to have been entirely or near-entirely evacuated.

Movement away from the coast did not occur, on average, over large distances, with the majority of movement taking place to inland areas relatively nearby the coastal evacuation zones. Overall the counties of Polk, Hardee, Pascoe, and Lee saw significant increases in total population as of Wednesday night.

The baseline Facebook user population is highly correlated with the Census population throughout western Florida at the ACS Place level, with an R2 value of .96.
